Definition: The text describes a moment of personal success and satisfaction, where the narrator feels like everything in their life is going well and their decisions have been correct. They mention a friend, Marty, who serves as a positive influence and encourages them to keep going. The narrator reflects on the importance of focusing on one's own journey and not getting distracted by social comparisons, hence the reference to "running your own race." This suggests that they have found a sense of confidence and motivation in their current situation.
